I cede to Richard's knowledge of the situation in Germany/EU.

A couple comments. First, There is still a strong sentiment in STL that we need to continue to defend talloamines even though we prepare to switch over because of their impending demise. Reasons to do so: "domino effect" on etheramines; defend other world areas to the best of our ability. Second. I was in Brazil all last week - they are very worried about this coming across the Atlantic to their part of the American hemisphere.

Bill,
Good summary. Thank you.

Re-your 2 other points;:

* clean results in new akzo studies will be inconsequential - the results of the existing studies are what we would expect, and there are all those Seralini claims to fall back on to keep the concerns going.. Anyway, there are non-hazardous formulations so why sell a hazardous one?

* how can you ban just glyphosate products - easy, glyphosate is safe so they have to regulate based on the most toxic part of the formulation. But, yes, there are a lot of logic problems and disproportionate regulation issues here.

Regards
Richard
